The 12th Imaging Perspectives course hosted by the Royal Marsden focuses on Imaging of the Liver and Pancreas. The course aims to provide an update on imaging of malignant diseases of the liver and pancreas with interactive clinical cases. The course includes lectures from specialist radiologists, oncologists and surgeons. Lectures will be supplemented with interactive voting.

Learning objectives include an update on multimodality imaging focusing on malignant disorders of the liver and pancreas.

About the course

The course will update on the latest multimodality imaging perspectives from a radiological and clinical viewpoint focusing on the malignant diseases of the liver and pancreas. Experts from all disciplines within the MDT: radiology; medical, clinical and surgical oncology will discuss imaging requirements for the management of specific conditions involving the liver and pancreas including primary and metastatic disease.

Who should attend?

This course is designed for consultant or trainee radiologists, oncologists, specialist registrars, radiographers and all professionals involved in oncology.

Who's on the teaching faculty?

The faculty is comprised of world leading specialists from The Royal Marsden, Chelsea and Westminster Hospital and Brussels.

Where is the course?

Due to the COVID-19 pandemic, this course will be held virtually.

We hope you will be able to join us for the 2021 virtual course!
